Excerpt: . . . grief, with many other expressions in the same chapter of the like import; should we, poor sinful creatures, repine at a measure of suffering so far short of his, and also below our deserts; and so needful, perhaps, for maturing our Christian character, and preparing us for an admission into the kingdom of rest and peace. As my race is not yet completed, thou mayest be ready to wonder, all circumstances considered, at my boldness. But whatever may hereafter befall me, such is the present frame of my mind, that I am encouraged, with reverence and gratitude, I trust, thus to commune with thee, my endeared friend, for whom I desire all spiritual preservation and prosperity. To J. J. Gurnet. 1834, 3 mo. 1. --Thou hast expressed a desire for my sympathetic remembrances in the prosecution of thy arduous engagements in London and its vicinity. These thou hast I believe daily, how much oftener I cannot say. One thing I know, that, if ever my heart be enabled to ascend by living aspirations to the throne of grace, I desire to bear thee upon it, and that thy true interests of every kind may be inseparably connected with every breathing and every cry for myself and others, who are the most near and dear to me. So that were I indeed a father, as thou art willing to suppose, perhaps I could do no more. On the very important subject of prayer, Isometimes think,...
