Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: .back to the Eternal City, and placed him again custodian of those possessions which have been consecrated to the maintenance, dignity, and independence of the Church. To-day, all Christendom is awaiting with patient confidence the time when that same God will restore to his venerable and Saintly Representative, Leo the Thirteenth, those temporal possessions which a sacrilegious and avaricious government wrested from his predecessor, amid bloodshed and carnage, in September, 1870. Although At the Congress of Paris, during the year 1856, the Italian Minister of State, the infamous Cavour, aided and abetted by English perfidy, declared against the temporal power of the Pope. His objections were triumphantly refuted by Count Rayneval, French during the first three centuries of Christianity, when the Church was bathed in the blood of her children, the Sovereign Pontiff was not a Temporal Ruler, and although the Temporal Power may not be absolutely necessary to the Church, yet the Catholics of all tongues and climes have spoken out on the subject with marvellous unanimity: declaring it to be their irrevocable desire that the lawful bishop of Rome shall be the sole guardian of the accumulated offerings of their generous and self-sacrificing forefathers in the faith. All Catholics believe that the Temporal Power is necessary in order to insure the independence of their Chief Pastor, and to secure the untrammelled liberty of the Church. They demand and will accept nothing less than the recognition by all men of the ancient rights and privileges...
